

Restless Nature
16th July - 10th September
at Newlyn Art Gallery

'Liminal 2010', pigments onto Hahnemule German etching paper and graphite drawing, by Katayoun Dowlatshahi

Featuring

G L Brierley, Sam Douglas, Katayoun Dowlatshahi, Edwina Fitzpatrick, Reece Jones, Rob Kessler, Chinwook Kim, Alastair Mackie, Julie Myers and Mark Wright

"We enjoy being out in nature so much because it has no opinion about us."

'Thus spoke' Nietzsche; the idea that nature is neutral and non-judgmental rubs against our constant need to anthropomorphise the world around us - talking to trees, the spooky presence of a forest, the woods in a child's fairy tale. Nature is at once a playground of innocence, a place of unapologetic life and death, and also, as witnessed in a recent flux of international tragedies, a place beyond human control.

The artists selected for this exhibition use nature as their source material to describe the actual or imagined world around them. The psychological impact of nature upon them as individuals or their exploration of a more general Man and Nature, is realised through a range of media and content: from the scientific to the sublime.

Participating Artists

Alastair Mackie's extraordinary work is made from mouse skulls found in regurgitated owl pellets and then formed into a hollow sphere, whilst A is to B as B is to C, 2010, is made from wasp nests and re-pulped and pressed into A4 sheets of paper. With a clear historical line to the Vanitas* works of art produced in northern Europe in the 16th and 17th centuries, Mackie creates work that is at once stunning, fascinating and macabre, collecting and constructing with masterful skill and precision.

Katayoun Dowlatshahi's hauntingly beautiful work, a combination of photographed and drawn imagery, is subliminally rooted in the landscape and architecture of Iran. Liminal is a new body of work produced from double exposures onto 6 x 6 roll film working alongside graphite pencil drawings of mountain-scapes. These works have a more formal relationship with the landscape yet what they represent is a more experiential and very personal journey; they are by the nature of their production artificial landscapes, self-reflexive and evocative.

Pudera 2010 by G L Brierley

G L Brierley's paintings also hark back to the still lifes of the 17th century, whilst their ambition is firmly placed in the 21st. Wonderfully ambiguous, the work exists in the cusp between imagined nature and abstraction. Brierley's use of paint is both experimental and controlled, creating suggestive, almost visceral works which are sensual, antagonistic, intriguing.

Extraordinary imagined worlds collide with reality in Chinwook Kim's large-scale drawings. A recent graduate of the Slade School of Fine Art, Kim's Korean heritage is evidenced in his wonderfully graphic depictions of nature. Occasionally we glimpse figures within the composition, caught and bound in tangled vines and branches. The image twists and turns, striving to break free from the confines of the canvas, but it is kept in check by the Kim's considerable draughtsmanship.

Petrified Lake by Mark Wright

Fantastical, imagined nightscapes take us into the world of the unknown in Mark Wright's painted canvasses. With a dream-like quality and lit by moonlight, the trees seem to emanate from other worlds. With their sci-fi edge they reference the 1950s and '60s, as the threat of world destruction became ever more real. Reece Jones' drawings also allude to the super-natural with large, unique drawings streaked with piercing shafts of white. These beams seem altogether unnatural, made from headlights, fireworks or some other force.

With a background in Fine Art, Julie Myers' internationally recognised practice has always involved a response to place, or a specific context beyond the studio or gallery. Utilising drawing, photography, video, sound, interactive and locative technologies she produces projects that range from sophisticated media-scapes to hand-drawn animations. Dandelion Seedhead is created using live data from a local weather station. As a result the drawing sways and bends in response to the wind. Collaborating with computer programming technicians in Berlin, weather folk in Cornwall and the curators, Julie Myers has created an extraordinary work that crosses the boundaries between technology, art and the environment.

Sam Douglas subverts the traditional through imagery and use of materials. A landscape with similarities to Constable and the lyrical work of Samuel Palmer may reveal, on further inspection, architectural or natural elements out of kilter with the surrounding scene.

Both Rob Kessler and Edwina Fitzpatrick collaborate with professionals studying botanical or scientific elements of nature. Over the past decade Kessler has explored our obsession with natural imagery, working extensively with botanical scientists at Kew Gardens to explore the creative potential of microscopic plant material. The resulting images are re-mastered to enhance their forms with astonishing clarity. Visually, the works have a seductive, luscious feel whilst the subject seems at once alien and incredibly familiar. Fitzpatrick works in both the public and private sphere exploring the ideas of 'mutability and change'. Her practice considers our obsession with controlling nature even as we attempt to reverse the damage of past intervention.

(left) Orchid by Edwina Fitzpatrick (right) Oak Flowers by Rob Kessler

A selection of hi-res images of work by all participating artists is available.

For more information, to request images or artist interviews please contact
Kathy Hill, Marketing Officer, Newlyn Art Gallery & The Exchange
Telephone: 01736 363715 email: Kathy.hill@newlynartgallery.co.uk

Blair Todd, Exhibitions Manager, Newlyn Art Gallery & The Exchange
Telephone: 01736 363715 email: blair.todd@newlynartgallery.co.uk

Notes to editors:

Restless Nature was originally shown at Collyer Bristow Gallery, London
'Vanitas' describes the 'meaninglessness of earthly life and the transient nature of vanity'

G L Brierley and Sam Douglas courtesy Madder 139

Alastair Mackie and Reece Jones courtesy All Visual Arts

Rob Kessler is currently working on a fellowship with molecular biologists at the Gulbenkian Science Institute in Portugal. A recent publication Rob Kessler: Up Close, January 2010, includes a preface by Jenni Lomax, Director of Camden Arts Centre, London.

Edwina Fitzpatrick is currently undertaking an AHRC funded collaborative practice-based PhD. Studying part time, she is working with Glasgow School of Art and the Forestry Commission at Grizedale in the Lake District. Mark Wright's work is in public and private collections including: British Airways, David Roberts Collection, Deutsche Bank, Merrill Lynch, Nick Mason, Pfizers Collection, Royal College of Art, Robert and Susan K. Summer, NY, Sony International, Wellcome Trust

Curators: Day+Gluckman

Lucy Day and Eliza Gluckman have worked as a curatorial partnership since 2006. For more information about their previous projects and exhibition visit www.dayandgluckman.co.uk

Exhibition Events at Newlyn Art Gallery

Curators' Talk - Fri 15th July

Join curators Lucy Day and Eliza Gluckman on the opening evening

Art and Nature - A Discussion - Sat 3rd September

As a concluding event to Restless Nature, join us for an informal discussion on art as a tool for exploring the relationship between humans and nature.

Newlyn Art Gallery, New Road, Newlyn, Penzance, Cornwall, TR18 5PZ

01736 363715 www.newlynartgallery.co.uk Mon - Fri, 10am - 5pm FREE ADMISSION all year round

The Exchange and Newlyn Art Gallery is part funded by Arts Council England and Cornwall Council

